Looking ahead to the future of Christianity

What's the future of Christianity in Canada? That's the question I asked Michael Pahl, executive director of Mennonite Church Manitoba and Michael Wilson, minister at Charleswood United Church.

While acknowledging predicting the future is hard, Pahl nevertheless had a few ideas based on his experience as a pastor and denominational leader.

First off, congregations will be smaller due to declining interest in Christianity, he said, and they will be less tied to buildings — perhaps selling off facilities that have become too big and too expensive to maintain and then either renting or sharing a facility with another congregation or two.
